Patient-controlled analgesia in obstetrics: a retrospective study. The use of patient-controlled analgesia (PCA) in obstetrics has been studied for over a decade and in this study we have investigated the effectiveness and safety of the use of PCA in obstetrics at our centre and then compared our results with data published elsewhere. Fifty-two PCA-naïve parturients undergoing a variety of obstetric procedures were included in this retrospective study and were followed up for a minimum of 48 h. There was a statistically significant reduction in the use of opioids in the PCA group with only two patients requiring intrathecal morphine after the first 48 h. There was no difference in adverse events between the PCA group and the intravenous (IV) morphine group. We conclude that PCA is a safe and effective alternative to IV morphine, and has significant advantages over traditional PCA for the management of severe postoperative pain.

Q: What is the difference between a class and an interface in OOP? Possible Duplicate: What's the difference between a class and an interface? I was reading about the difference between a class and an interface in the OOP section of a book I'm reading when I read something that made me think I didn't really know what the difference was. In an implementation of a class, could you have methods with return values that weren't explicitly defined in the class definition? (

Each student was tasked with constructing a summary essay on a topic of his/her choice. The summaries should be of at least 4-6 pages in length with a page break at paragraph 8. The students were given one line of edit. An editor was provided to any student whose first summary was deemed adequate by the reviewer. Once accepted, students were given a due date of 4 weeks. The assigned instructor would then receive a complete copy of the assignment with student name attached. At the end of the semester, students were given a final grade based on three categories. 8.2 The teachers who taught this course were excellent. The students thought that they had a good idea of what was going to happen during the course of the semester. They had a basic understanding of the work and the how to complete each of the assignments. 4.7 The course material was difficult to understand, even for the teacher who designed the course. That is one of the reasons why I do not recommend this course. It is also not well-designed. The grading system is also not user-friendly. In order to complete an assignment in this course, you have to cut and paste, copy and paste and a lot of cutting and pasting. The course content was difficult, but the teachers provided helpful resources. The tests were easy and the grading of the homework was fair. The homework is given from a sheet on the website and is fairly straightforward. 8.4 The course material was really challenging. However, the teachers provided valuable resources in order to help students come up with strong solutions. I think the grading system needs improvement. It seems kind of arbitrary, and at times, unfair. The course was extremely easy to follow. The assignments were easy, and the teacher provided all of the resources that were needed. I think the grading system needs some tweaking, though, because there are too many negative marks awarded for relatively simple issues.
