Although the current class of vertebral osteosynthesis devices has been shown to be useful for immobilizing and treating many pathological conditions, there are some patients for whom current implants do not provide sufficient support or stabilization. For example, vertebral osteosynthesis devices are often unable to address many conditions occurring at the junction of the vertebral body and the spinal canal in the thoracic and lumbar spine. This is a shot of a customer developing new products, before the factory shift in the background. So you want a customer shot but also a factory shot. Sometimes a quick setup in the studio is the only option. To make this work, we needed to show the scene in front of the backdrop, with the impact lighting to bring out the highlights in the product. This takes time to position the product in the scene. The final images are usually done in the studio and then developed on location. Here the client wanted to show the product in the office. The design is spot on. But lighting was tricky. There is a light over their shoulder, but the bulk of the light is from the windows to the right. If it was on camera left, it would block part of the view. We had to pick a direction to keep the tone. I chose the floor to soften the tone a bit, but not too much. Some lens choice made for one beautiful shot. There is a detail in the foreground that I couldn't get by using a 20mm lens. But they picked the right lens to show the details in the product. A striking number of muslims around the world are turning against their own mothers, refusing to eat or sleep with them. As reported by the Daily Mail : A tiny nation, with just 38,000 people, has been hit with the worst outbreak of the sleeping sickness ever seen. And the source of the outbreak is the very families themselves, with some desperate mothers even considering suicide. Faced with a situation where the only effective cure is to trek back to the village to be quarantined, some families have resorted to self-isolation, with one family reportedly refusing to eat or sleep with their mother. The outbreak, which has killed one man so far, is believed to have been caused by sorcery. In Guinea, the outbreak of sleeping sickness has grown by 500% in one year, with local authorities sounding the alarm over an increase in reported cases.
