Golf is a game that's been played and enjoyed by men and women throughout the ages. The name "golf" actually comes from a combination of the words "golf club" and "cough." The game actually started in England, during the 1500's, at least as far as royal gameballs are concerned. Many people think that the very first balls used for the game were made from animal gut. These gut-covered balls gave way to the lindenwood golf ball. This ball is made today using a mixture of a variety of hickory staves and a chemical product called butyl rubber. Each hole on a golf course is roughly one kilometer long. The golf hole is designed so that the golfer's ball will bounce off the edge of the green. This is because the green is made of a material called "greensward." Once the ball bounces off the edge of the green, it rolls down the other side until it drops into the "mull." A mull is a section of a golf hole where the ball could land and bounce back into the fairway, or it could drop off of the edge of the green. The golfers usually line up to tee off before nine in the morning. As the golfer steps onto the green, his or her weight moves forward and back to keep the club in contact with the ball. The angle at which the golfer strikes his or her ball also varies. Sometimes the golfer may go for an angle, hitting the ball with his or her face; but most of the time the golfer will swing the club just back and to the left of center. Once the swing is complete, the golfer then takes hold of the club and swings to a stop. The golfer's weight should continue moving until the club comes to a stop. Once the ball is in flight, the golfer won't know exactly where it is. Instead, the golfer will scan for his or her ball using a device called a "golf watch." This device will help the golfer see where the ball is. Not only is the golf watch helpful for detecting the ball, it will also give the golfer an idea of the golf club's angle. The device doesn't have to be worn on the wrist. It can be worn on the hip or back. Some golf
