Thanks for the balanced assessment of the best choices for the gun owner. While I agree that the .45 cannot be effective against moving and armed intruders, the target distance for optimal, often intended, effectiveness is generally within a six-foot radius and below. The .380 can be effective beyond this distance. I have a .45 with me most of the time. I believe that carrying a concealed gun with equal accuracy will give you the best chance of survival if the gun and the shooter perform as planned. I do understand that a well trained law enforcement officer may more effectively deploy a primary weapon and he could use my .45 or even better, a police issue .45 in a "semi" automatic, such as the XDs. As a .38 shooter I can see the point, but as a retired officer of the United States Marine Corps I am not going to start carrying a .45 if I am carrying a .38. I do carry my XDs so that I will have a weapon that I can kill most men with if and when it ever becomes necessary. They are nice smooth firing stainless steel pistols that I just made so I can carry them concealed. Just think, if I carry a .38 and decide to go home and find a demon I am going to find out if my XDs work because I will be dead. I was also issued a .45 as a Marine and the thought of pulling it out at a moment's notice and the thought of pulling the trigger scares me. Notes: AI Bloodsuckers, also called CTF bots, are called Bloodsuckers because they are attracted by blood from other bots dying in the game. Bloodsuckers do not have much combat sense because their code is outdated. There are much more important things for them to do, like spawning and saving people, to make the game more balanced. That is why there are no new Bloodsuckers for this patch. This means you don't see Bloodsuckers for a while. There is no public testing, but there is a bug report field. I can probably just go with this, but I like my sv40 after all these are just opinions so this is the opinion of a contractor in the construction trade. I have owned many weapons and this gun has performed extremely well for me and has been my go to handgun for years. I have 5 of the mags for it and they are very stable. I put the simulators to the test and it functions as advertised. The simulators have been consistent with the real gun, I have fired 300 rounds. I did like that the videos were from another country. I would say this might be the best choice for the individual. Often called the "Car Trucker's Handgun", it is the most useful, effective and universal practical carjacker gun available. When you can put 9mm rounds down on your target from 200 yards away, you will have a happy camper. If you are driving while armed, be aware that it is possible to get a speeding ticket because of the noise of the weapon, and that may generate a lot of heat and light that will distract other drivers. I have used the 9mm version and personally recommend it. Shotguns are good, but they are kinda boring and they have some limitations. There are far more powerful and versatile weapons and they do have some positive qualities. For the most part, shotguns have a narrow field of view, leave a large home-made signature, and the recoil can be pretty severe. A very well written article, and one I happen to agree with 100%. Enough so that, for nearly 25 years, a Walther PPK/S in .380 was my CC Weapon. It was retired to Range Baby status only because of my aging eyes. I could no longer make out the sights in Low Light Drills. To this day, it remains the most accurate pistol in my modest collection. Capable of 1 groups at 50 across a rest. Not even my M9 is quite that good. With modern Defensive Loads like the Fed Hydro-Shock, Speer Gold Dot Lawman, and my favorite the Hornady Critical Defense, the .380s no slouch. I like the SIG P365 I've carried for the last 4 years, but it took considerable effort on my part retraining myself to use it. 5ec8ef588b
