tools I use in classrooms and how I manage them include Google Apps, Google Drive, Google Slides, Google Assignments and Google Sheets. I use Google Drive for storing documents and sharing the documents amongst the students. I know Google Docs are not entirely a Microsoft Word equivalent but that's what most students are used to using. If they are comfortable with Google Docs, they should be comfortable with Google Slides, which uses the same markup as Google Docs. Google Apps is free but a feature I use in the classrooms is Google Forms which can be used as a digital textbook or as a paperless learning tool. Google Slides and Google Sheets are free also. For Word, the Google Sheets and Google Slides are more like learning notes I made when I read the textbooks and review the material. They are free and they are a good place to write down my notes or discussion topics. I have also used Google Slides to explain things and encourage students to interact with the slides and give the students some input as well. Google Assignments are used when I have a short quiz/problem, where the student type in the question and I use the Google Apps to generate the responses and grades the responses. I think all of these tools and methods I use in my classroom are good. As with technology, as it comes out new and better, there are always new tools that can be used and some of the benefits already have been given. It's up to the teachers to explore and experiment to find out which tools can best fit the needs of the teachers and students. Which ones will help the teachers manage time efficiently and best leverage the students' interest in the subject. It's like buying a new computer. You will always find new bells and whistles and there are always new things to learn about the technology. Technology has changed education and that's a good thing. We should not be afraid of technology and we should use technology to our advantage and not our disadvantage. 5ec8ef588b
