More than fifteen items of clothing were selected in terms of price, brand or texture to represent three dimensions of clothing appearance. In the study, an experiment was designed to measure the effects of clothing ownership on purchase intention. The study was conducted in two phases. In the first phase, to measure the perception of clothing ownership on clothing appearance, a questionnaire was developed to measure what clothes appear to a person based on a visual salience test. A total of 150 students participated in this phase. In the second phase, the effects of clothing ownership on purchase intention were measured using a between-subjects experimental design with four conditions: Own, Copy, Gift and a control condition. The perceived appearance of the target items in these conditions and the customer's purchase intention for the items were measured using two questionnaire surveys. The results showed that clothing ownership can affect purchase intention in terms of clothing appearance. In the condition of Own and Gift, the participants perceived the items as more attractive than in the other three conditions.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an improved process for producing a high-density polyolefin film and a high-density polyolefin film produced by the same process. 2. Description of the Prior Art A high-density polyolefin film such as a polypropylene film and a polyethylene film has been conventionally produced by a process comprising the steps of producing a film by extruding a polyolefin melt through a slot die and hot-winding the thus extruded film. However, the conventional process has the following disadvantages. (1) Since extruded film is cooled by air, the film is insufficient in cooling effect. Also, since air is brought into the film, the film is difficult to be uniformly cooled. (2) When extruded film is stretched, crystallization of the film

As far as I know, most verbs become possessive when used with the word "of." For example: He cut my hair. = His (or some other object) cut my hair. However, I noticed that it seems like there are some verbs that become possessive in other ways, sometimes with no additional objects. Are these examples ever correct? He drew my portrait. They painted my portrait. Note: I believe this may be a case of "does" being sometimes used as a relative verb. If you think it's different enough from "be," feel free to use any of your examples. A: There are a few words in English that do not take an object. Ex. He drew my portrait One is location. Your example of portrait is a person's 'face' - meaning the appearance or look. The object is the person's face (e.g. "My face" or "My face isn't very attractive"). Other words like eyes and ears, sometimes just the teeth, sometimes the shoulders, but generally the object is the person's face. The noun senses include: the face of the earth every part of the human body the body of a canoe the body of a person a horse's body the body of a table the body of an object the body of a tree the body of the earth The verb senses include: make faces / stare stand in front of / in the eyes of look into / in the eyes of look upon / in the eyes of look with / in the eyes of watch / in the eyes of watch over / in the eyes of look on / with / about There are many words that can mean 'of', but if the meaning does not take the thing being done into account, it is a thing. There are some variations on the theme, like: lift something 'up' lift someone or some thing 'up' raise somebody or something 'up' raise up someone or something 'up' Another word that can work for some senses is 'by': he
