between expression of the far-flung gene and formation of CFU-s17+ in the bone marrow of mice. In previous studies it was demonstrated that 7-day culture of bone marrow cells in medium enriched with newborn calf serum, is a suitable method to study the formation of CFU-s17+ cells which are probably committed to commitment to granulocyte-macrophage- and monocytic-lineage cells. Thus, under optimal culture conditions the observed granulocytic and monocytic colony-forming cells (CFU-C) were shown to give rise to granulocytes (CFU-GM) and monocytes (CFU-M). No clusters of colonies (CFU-M-E) could be detected. However, in preliminary experiments it could be shown that even in the presence of normal serum, the formation of such clusters of colonies was inhibited in cultures of bone marrow cells of mice but not of rats. It was therefore the aim of the present study to investigate whether an altered expression of the far-flung gene could be related to this effect. Hence, by using a mouse cell line which expressed the far-flung gene in absence of inducer as well as an allele of the far-flung gene which is supposed to be expressed in the absence of inducer, it was found that the precursors of CFU-M-E cluster formation showed a much lower far-flung gene expression than cells which lack clusters of CFU-M-E. Thus, the reduced expression of the far-flung gene in the CFU-M-E precursor cells might be the cause for its inability to form clusters of CFU-M-E. Got a minute? Tapping into the power of the search economy to boost scholarship Posted August 29th, 2017 How would you use Google as a resource to help you write your thesis, to find the paper that supports your article, or to research some details in a dissertation? I bet you'd wish you'd thought of it a long time ago. Imagine that each paper had an online version, a blog and a discussion forum. You'd also find a reference database and a gradebook. All the info is free for you to use.
